WELCOME FROM THE AMERICAN SOCIETY FOR ETHNOHISTORY PRESIDENT

It is a great honor and pleasure to welcome you to this historic meeting of the American Society for Ethnohistory, held for the first time in one of the most beautiful and ethnohistorically rich cities in all of the Americas. How fortunate we are to be here! On behalf of the officers of the society, I thank our local hosts—Bas van Doesburg, Michel Oudijk, Maribel Alvarado García, Michael Swanton, and Yasnaya Elena Aguilar—as well as Kevin Terraciano, Lisa Sousa, and their UCLA colleagues on the program committee, for organizing an extraordinary series of discussions and events. It is also a rare privilege to preside over the recognition of four influential ethnohistorians, Professors Deeds, Green, Hoxie, and Salomon. I wish you all a stimulating, enjoyable, and memorable few days in wonderful Oaxaca.

BIENVENIDOS POR LA PARTE DEL COMITÉ LOCAL

El estado de Oaxaca es cultural- y biológicamente una de las regiones más diversas de las Américas. En un área de aproximadamente el mismo tamaño que el estado de Indiana, se hablan unas 15 lenguas indígenas tradicionalmente reconocidas que pertenecen a cinco familias lingüísticas distintas. Hoy en día, aproximadamente una tercera parte de la población de Oaxaca -más de un millón de habitantes- habla una de estas lenguas. El escribir en estas lenguas se remonta varios miles de años. La escritura mesoamericana nació hace 2,500 años en una región que incluye el actual estado de Oaxaca. Durante el periodo virreinal había varias tradiciones escriturales alfabéticas en lenguas oaxaqueñas. Casi todos los textos existentes de estas tradiciones permanecen en Oaxaca. Apenas el año pasado, la UNESCO declaró “Memoria del Mundo” un corpus de cientos de documentos alfabéticos en zapoteco, mixteco, chochona y náhuatl, escritos entre el siglo XVI y el siglo XVIII. Por todas estas razones, celebramos la decisión de organizar la Reunión Anual de 2018 de la Sociedad Americana de Etnohistoria aquí en la ciudad de Oaxaca. Esperamos que todos ustedes tengan una estancia agradable, productiva y, sobre todo, inspiradora en el corazón de Mesoamérica.

WELCOME FROM THE LOCAL ARRANGEMENTS COMMITTEE

The Mexican state of Oaxaca is culturally and biologically one of the most diverse regions of the Americas. In an area approximately the same size as the state of Indiana, some fifteen traditionally recognized indigenous languages are spoken that belong to five completely distinct language families. About one-third of the population of Oaxaca—over a million people—speaks one of these languages today. Writing in some of these languages reaches back millennia. Two thousand, five hundred years ago, Mesoamerican writing was born in a region that includes what is today Oaxaca. These were the first writing systems in the Americas. During Spanish colonial rule, alphabetic writing traditions existed for several Oaxacan languages. Almost all of the extant texts of this tradition remain in Oaxaca. Just last year, UNESCO declared a corpus of hundreds of alphabetic documents written in Zapotec, Mixtec, Chocho and Nahuatl from the sixteenth through eighteenth centuries, as “Memory of the World”. For all these reasons, we therefore celebrate the decision to hold the 2018 Annual Meeting of the American Society for Ethnohistory here in Oaxaca City. We hope all of you will have a pleasant, productive and, above all, inspiring stay in the heartland of Mesoamerica.
